Title: A critical analysis of decision-making protocols used in approving commercial mining license for the Beverley Uranium Mine in Adnyamathanha Country [electronic resource] : toward effective Indigenous participation in caring for cultural resources Publication info: 2011

Partial contents: Overview of Thesis; Philosophical Issues within Social Research; Cultural Heritage - Identification, Protection and Management; Indigenous Cultural Heritage as a Resource, and Indigenous Engagement; Exploration and Mining of Land Resources and Engagement with Indigenous Peoples; Colonial Encounters between Adnyamathanha Cultural Heritage and Mining Proposals; Case Description of Adnyamathanha Cultural Resources Management and Beverley Project Impact Assessment; Critical Analysis of Heritage Protection and Resources Management relevant to Impact Assessment; Reflections & Recommendations; Appendices; References

Abstract: "An exploratory approach via a single case study is used in this thesis to better understand two embedded units of analysis: the first unit of analysis explores Adnyamathanha resources management and decision-making protocols, and the second unit of analysis explores the Environmental Impact Assessment for Beverley Uranium Mine. 'Adnyamathanha' literally translates into English as 'name for the people of the rock country' and is associated with several sub-groups of Indigenous peoples from the northern Flinders Ranges region of South Australia. These sub-groups include Kuyani and Adnya-Kuyani, Biladapa, Warlpi, and Yadliawada and all are inextricably linked through complex relationships between people, land, kinship and language. This thesis involves a critical examination of the various levels of participation by Adnyamathanha in the decision-making processes surrounding the commercial licensing at Beverley Mine. It clarifies issues and raises new questions about the interface between players involved in land use through a qualitative and participatory research methodology and set of methods used to explore the topic.

Theoretical understandings are linked to Indigenous heritage and resources management to highlight the cultural values of past, present and future relationships between Indigenous peoples and customary lands. Deconstruction of the geographical landscape offers an insight to the spaces and places necessary for an equitable assessment of commercial, social and environmental land values. In this study the trajectory of cultural heritage protection and resources management is examined as part of the key legislated processes that relates to heritage security and sustainability in Adnyamathanha country. Native Title was a focal point of engagement within the Beverley case and is therefore central to many of the discussion points throughout this thesis. An examination of the extent to which mining proponents and governments are responsible for impact assessments goes hand in hand with this discussion regarding participation by Aboriginal players in land use. Examination of the Environmental Impact Assessment (EIA) in the Beverley case reveals that government and industry processes facilitated mining and devalued Adnyamathanha cultural heritage and site protection. I argue that the ideology behind 'impact assessment' and land use procedures within Australia remains dominated by a colonial framework committed to prioritising commercial perceptions of what is valuable based on national and global business related interests. This ideology fails to accommodate Indigenous cultural heritage values and denies Indigenous peoples' human rights. Findings reveal a disturbing scenario of inequitable engagement that unequivocally favoured miners' rights and brutally disempowered Adnyamathanha, a pattern consistent with global trends. The significance of this thesis lies in the validation of a culturally diverse range of understandings of land resources, especially the meanings of Adnyamathanha identity and Indigenous connectivity to the environment. Cultural heritage protection is explicitly linked to Indigenous governance and Indigenous engagement through prioritisation of Indigenous needs and values. This thesis identifies how capacity building and self-determination can improve governance and engagement strategies to galvanise and strengthen future outcomes for Adnyamathanha and other Indigenous players dealing with exploration and mining. Improving impact assessment participation using culturally appropriate protocols is one part of this multi-faceted solution" [taken from abstract]
