Archivist's note

This finding aid was compiled from a box list prepared by Ewan Maidment and index tables compiled by Lucy Stevens, in 2017. The box list and the indexes were prepared prior to return of copies of this collection and the audio recordings, to the Karajarri community.

Contact between John Howard and the Institute having ceased years previous to the return of these materials, Thomas Allen, the AIATSIS Rights Manager, conducted a search for John Howard to clarify deposit conditions. This search was unsuccessful; the decision was made that the AIATSIS CEO or their delegate would give permission for use.

ADMINISTRATIVE NOTE

In December 1973, John Howard responded to an advertisement placed by AIAS in The Times in London, offering two social anthropology research fellowships. John Howard was interested in the fellowship focussing on Aboriginal Customary Law.

From 1967 - 1972, Howard had conducted fieldwork among the Kom of Cameroon, studying their customary law relating to marriage and succession. This fieldwork provided the basis for his PhD thesis, which was accepted by the London University School of Oriental and African Studies in 1972. During his time in Cameroon, he had also lectured in law at the Cameroon University Department of English and Customary Law. Although qualified as a lawyer, his fieldwork and employment in Cameroon required reading in anthropology, and cross-cultural interaction.

Howard's application for the social anthropology research fellowship into Aboriginal Customary Law was successful. Possible places for his research included Papunya, the Tiwi Islands and Port Keats (Wadeye) in the Northern Territory although La Grange (Bidyadanga) in the Kimberley region of Western Australia was ultimately selected.

From 1974-1976, he conducted field work with the Garadjeri [Karajarri] people living at La Grange (Bidyadanga), next to the Pallottine Mission. During this period he also lectured for four months of each year at the University of Delaware on jurisprudence and comparative law.

The interaction of the "coastal" and the "desert" peoples gathered around the Pallottine Mission, their interactions with external bodies like the National Aboriginal Consultative Committee, relations between the La Grange people and the Aboriginal people and Don McLeod who lived at nearby Strelley, and between the people at La Grange and Aboriginal people living in Broome (some of whom were Garadjeri [Karajarri]) formed part of Howard's observation of the context for his research. The tensions created by people with differing law being co-located at La Grange, and the exercise of Aboriginal law in response to the influence of the 'more militant' group living at Strelley, were of particular note for Howard. He recorded what the Garadjeri [Karajarri] were willing to share with him, a willingness which increased over time. Those recordings form Howard_J01.

The Inquiry into the National Aboriginal Consultative Committee, conducted by Les Hiatt, held hearings in La Grange during 1976; these events are noted in Howard's field reports. (The papers from this Inquiry are held in AIATSIS at MS 5069 Public meeting and private hearing papers of the Committee of Inquiry into the Role of the National Aboriginal Consultative Committee.) Howard was also involved, in a supportive capacity, in negotiations by the Garadjeri [Karajarri] with the Aboriginal Land Fund Commission, for the purchase of the Frazier Downs station in 1976. The Australian Law Reform Commission (ALRC) opened its inquiry into the Recognition of Aboriginal Customary Laws, in February 1977; John Howard was suggested as a possible advisor or appointee to this inquiry although it is not clear from the relevant AIATSIS administrative records what his ultimate involvement in the inquiry was. Similarly, he was admitted to the West Australian Bar to facilitate his observation of the interaction, if any, between English law and Aboriginal law; again AIATSIS administrative records, and this collection, do not indicate the extent of his activity there.

Howard took six months leave of absence to go to England for family reasons in 1976, during which time he transcribed and indexed the recordings. These transcriptions and index comprise this Collection. On his return from England, he applied for further funding for four months' more fieldwork and to write up the findings of his research. This application was unsuccessful, in part because of AIAS' own funding constraints.

John Howard's association with AIAS ended in June 1977. In his final report to AIAS, he noted the complexity of Aboriginal law and the time and relationships required to become fully cognisant with it; these factors were outside his experience in Cameroon. He concluded:

The Aborigines have my admiration. Always they behaved with the utmost courtesy to my intrusions, with time as they became a little more convinced of what I was doing and not doing, they gave me the benefit of some of their knowledge.
