COLLECTION OVERVIEW

Scope and contents note

This collection is a selection of grey literature from the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Commission Library, which had not been catalogued by that library. The items were produced mainly during the 1970s and cover topics like education, health, housing, state and commonwealth arrangements, law, legal rights, customary law, land rights, employment social security, economic development, mining, uranium, State and Federal government inquiries, child welfare, infant mortality, alcohol, disease, archaeology, and consultation between Aboriginal groups and organisations and various government departments. There is some material about or by Torres Strait Islander people, generally produced by the Queensland government.

The creators of the material include Aboriginal and community organisations, state and federal government departments, activists, church missions and missionaries, state and federal ministers, government employees and academics.

Reports, conference papers, policy documents, speeches, pamphlets

There are no originals in this collection; all items are copies.

Provenance

The collection was donated to the AIATSIS Collection when the Commission was dismantled in 2005. The Department of Prime Minister and Cabinet assigned copyright to AIATSIS in 2017.

Material separated from the collection

The donation included published items as well as unpublished pamphlets and grey literature. Published materials have been added to the AIATSIS Print Collection and have been catalogued individually.

Duplicates have not been retained.

Archivist’s note

The arrangement of this collection follows the order in which it was held in the AITSIC library, viz., Dewey Decimal Classification and alphabetically by author. The ATSIC library collecting strategy is therefore difficult to discern, with a seeming eclectic array of items. Themes and issues relevant to Aboriginal people are evident across the collection but there is neither depth nor comprehensiveness of either the material addressing a particular theme or the output of a particular author or creating organisation.
