BIOGRAPHICAL INFORMATION

David Robert Horton was born in 1945 in Perth Western Australia and completed his secondary schooling at the John Curtin High School, WA before commencing a Bachelor of Science degree majoring in Zoology, at the University of Western Australia in 1962. David Horton graduated with Zoology Honours in 1965.

University of Melbourne, Masters of Science, Zoology, graduating in 1967

University of New England, Armidale, NSW, Bachelor of Arts, Master of Science, Doctor of Philosophy, and a Doctor of Letters, in Zoology, Archaeology and English, graduating in 1973

University of York, Post-Doctoral Fellow, studying Biogeography, graduating in 1974

David Horton's career included research into scincid lizards and biogeography (1966-1974), Archaeozoology (sites from Cape York to SW Tasmania), Pleistocene extinctions, the role of fire in Australian ecosystems, and Pleistocene occupation of Australia (1974-1984).

David Horton's career at the AIAS (Australian Institute of Aboriginal Studies) and AIATSIS (Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies) began in 1974 when he was the Institute's osteologist, taking on the role of Palaeoecologist in 1975. He became acting Deputy Principal in 1984 and became Manager of the Publications section in 1984-85, until he became Director of Publications in 1988-89. David Horton was the Director of the Aboriginal Studies Press from 1989 until he left in April 1998.

David Horton's publications include: Recovering the tracks (1991), The encyclopaedia of Aboriginal Australia (1994), Aboriginal Australia – map (1996), The pure state of Nature (2000), and numerous contributions to journals and other publications.

The Encyclopaedia of Aboriginal Australia was published in 1994 and won the following awards: "The Australian" Award for Excellence in Educational Publishing; WA Premier's Literary Award; AIMIA (Australian Interactive Media Industry Association) Award for best Multimedia Title 1994; Centre for Australian Cultural Studies Award for 'An Outstanding Contribution to Australian Culture 1994'; NSW Premier's Literary Award 1995 Book of the Year; NSW Premier's Literary Award 1995 Special Award; Print Industry Gold Medal for excellence in printing.

The collection includes copies and drafts of papers and books written by David Horton, papers relating to AIAS membership, publications, grants, papers relating to the Encyclopaedia of Aboriginal Australia, maps and photographs, the Publicity section of AIAS, and Aboriginal Studies Press – ASP. The collection also includes Archaeology and Archaeozoology related material, memorandums, memos, correspondence, reports, book costings, diaries, desk calendars and statistics and other professional papers. Formats include photocopies p/c & manuscript m/s & typescript t/s. Papers relating to the production of 'The Encyclopaedia of Aboriginal Australia' are found throughout this collection, however the bulk of them can be found in Series 2 onwards.

Archivist's note

Some of the papers and manila folders had been bundled together and tied with string by David Horton. These have been described in such a way as to preserve their original arrangement.

The diaries, from 1990-1998, were found together in a padded bag and have been listed in Series 4. The desk calendars, from 1976-78, and 1982-1997, were found in shopping bags, and each calendar had been tied up with string. Some of them had unfolded paper clips through the holes to keep them together. The desk calendars also had post-it notes throughout. These have been attached to separate pieces of paper and filed in the location inside the calendar in which they were found. The calendars are arranged in date order. These have also been listed in Series 4.

Part 4. Action on encyclo [sic] maps
- MS 5086/2/2/26 Map of Aboriginal Australia created by David Horton, 1696 x 2021mm, hand coloured, nations and language groups on transparent paper

Archivist's note

The map of Aboriginal Australia, was being worked on by David Horton as part of the Encyclopaedia of Aboriginal Australia and was published in its own right after the smaller maps had been prepared for use in the encyclopaedia. The draft of this map is sometimes referred to as the 'Mud map' and indicates that it is a 'roughly drawn' map.

David Horton created the original map by laying a large piece of transparent paper over the top of a large Tindale map, working through the different nations and language groups. He searched for references from published works, theses and linguists, which he used to create the fuzzy borders of the map. In most cases these corresponded to the boundaries on the Tindale map.

The original map was used by designers for the maps in the printed encyclopaedia. The original hand drawn Horton map has a date of 1993 on it and the final version was produced by Australian Surveying and Land Information Group (Auslig), a precursor to Geoscience Australia in 1996.

Source: documented conversation between Charlotte Craw (AIATSIS) and David Horton on 9-1-2017.
