ADMINISTRATIVE and BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

Radiance is a low budget film shot in 1997. It had an Australia wide commercial release through United Pictures.

Adapted from Louis Nowra's stage play of the same name, Radiance was the third feature to be directed by, and first to be shot by, Indigenous Australians. It was screened on SBS and was nominated for seven Australian Film Industry Awards. Deborah Mailman won the AFI Award for Best Actress for her role in Radiance, the first time an Indigenous actor won it. The film won the Audience Favourite at Melbourne, Sydney and Canberra film festivals. International screenings included the London and Toronto festivals.

Radiance tells the story of three young Aboriginal women who return home for their mother's funeral to the north Queensland coast where they grew up. Occurring over twenty-four hours, the complications of the past are somewhat unraveled.

A number of unique features combined to make this film significant in Australian cinema history: its focus on Indigenous people as characters rather than social problems, positive critical reception, positive public reception, a commercial release for an Indigenous content film, and Indigenous creative control. It was included in Australian Best 100 Films, published to mark fifty years of Australian cinema.

Radiance established Deborah Mailman's career and consolidated Rachel Perkins, who directed the film, in a new career direction.

Rachel Perkins, an Arrernte and Kalkadoon woman, is the daughter of Eileen and Charlie Perkins, and granddaughter of Hetty Perkins. At the age of 18, she undertook a traineeship at the Central Australian Aboriginal Media Association, learning the technical aspects of film-making and the collaborative nature of storytelling in Central Australian communities. Feeling a responsibility to empower others and be the means for Indigenous people to speak, she became Executive Producer at SBS Television, generating programming for the Aboriginal Film Unit. She founded Blackfella Films in 1992, to counter the passive portrayals of Indigenous culture in textbooks and scripts written by non-Indigenous people; it would do this by producing culturally significant stories, told by and with Indigenous media practitioners.

Wanting to move into drama production, Rachel studied at the Australian Film Television and Radio School, graduating in 1995, while also working at the ABC as Executive Producer of the Indigenous Programs Unit. Radiance was her first feature film, tackling issues such as the Stolen Generation, racism, rape and adoption.

Other feature films she has directed since are Jasper Jones, One Night the Moon and Bran Nue Dae. She has continued to work in television, documentaries and the web, directing and/or writing and producing Mabo, episodes of Redfern Now, Black Panther Women and the First Australians series. From this work Rachel has won multiple awards.

Her commitment to creating or facilitating screen content that challenges conventional historical accounts means Rachel has also participated in implementing national training strategies, the establishment of National Indigenous Television and the Message Sticks Indigenous Film Festival. She has also sat on the boards of the Australian Film Commission, the NSW Film and Television Office and the Australian Film Television and Radio School, the Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Island Studies Foundation and currently (2017) the AIATSIS Council.
