ARRANGEMENT

AIATSIS has an extensive and representative holding of records related to the Treaty movement, including government and community initiatives, and is continuing to collect on this theme.

This document is a guide to Treaty materials held at AIATSIS as manuscript collections, pamphlet manuscripts, moving images, recorded sound and pictorial material. The material is grouped mainly by the originating organisation and entries are replicated if relevant to multiple groupings. Within each grouping, manuscript collections (prefix MS) are listed first, followed by pamphlet manuscripts (prefix PMS) moving images, recorded sound and pictorial material. Each type of material is listed in chronological order.

Access conditions are not shown on this document. For this information and to access the collections, please refer to Mura® (the AIATSIS catalogue), or contact CollectionEnquiry@aiatsis.gov.au

The AIATSIS website includes a digital exhibition of the Institute’s holding of Treaty materials.

BACKGROUND NOTE

The idea of a Treaty or Treaties with Australia’s Indigenous peoples has been debated and dissected for close to two hundred years. As early as 1832 the Governor of Van Diemen’s Land George Arthur concluded that “It was a fatal error in the first settlement of Van Diemen's Land that a treaty was not entered into with the Natives”¹ A few years later, in 1835, Port Phillip colonist John Batman claimed to have signed a ‘treaty’ or deed with Kulin nation Aboriginal leaders, providing them with 20 blankets, 30 tomahawks, 100 knives, 50 pairs of scissors, 30 looking glasses, 200 handkerchiefs, 100 pounds of flour and six shirts, in exchange for a tract of country at Port Philip containing about 500,000 acres.² Batman’s highly opportunistic ‘treaty’ was almost immediately declared invalid by Governor Bourke of New South Wales (then also governing Victoria) who on 6 August 1835, declared the British Crown owned the entire land of Australia, and that only it could sell or distribute land.³

The modern Treaty movement gained impetus in the second half of the 20th century, propelled by developments such as the 1967 Aboriginal referendum, land rights campaigns, establishment of the Aboriginal Tent Embassy early in 1972 and election of the Whitlam Government later that same year. Against this backdrop the Australian Senate in 1975 adopted a resolution put by Senator Neville Bonner in which “the Senate accepts the fact that the indigenous people of Australia, now known as Aborigines and Torres Strait Islanders, were in possession of this entire nation prior to the 1788 First Fleet landing at Botany Bay, urges the Australian Government to admit prior ownership by the said indigenous people, and introduce legislation to compensate the people now known as Aborigines and Torres Strait Islanders for dispossession of their land.”4

In 1977 the Fraser Government established the National Aboriginal Conference (NAC) to provide a forum for the expression of Aboriginal views. The NAC, which ran until 1985, contributed actively to the debate on a Treaty, and in 1979 requested that a Treaty be executed between the Aboriginal Nation(s) and the Australian Government. The NAC decided that the agreement should have an Aboriginal name
- the Makarrata.5

On the non-government front, a group of prominent Australians in 1979 established the Aboriginal Treaty Committee (ATC), chaired by Dr HC Coombs. The ATC, which ran until 1983, worked primarily to develop Treaty support amongst non-Indigenous Australians. It published extensively on Treaty issues, including Stewart Harris’s book, It’s Coming Yet, and promoted a Treaty through public and academic seminars and conferences.

In 1983 the Australian Parliament’s Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs published the report "Two Hundred Years Later ..." following the Committee’s enquiry into the feasibility of securing a compact or Makarrata between the Commonwealth Government and Aboriginal Australians. The Committee recommended amendment of the Constitution as the preferred option for progressing “a compact with representatives of the Aboriginal people.”

In connection with the 1988 Australian bicentennial, the Aboriginal Sovereign Treaty ’88 Campaign called for the recognition of Aboriginal Nations and Peoples' sovereign rights, and ownership of Australia, and for the Commonwealth Government to conclude a treaty with Aboriginal sovereign nations through the mechanisms of international law.

The year 1988 saw a significant development in the Treaty movement when Galarrwuy Yunupingu and Wenten Rubuntja, chairs of the Northern and Central Land Councils, presented then Prime Minister Bob Hawke with The Barunga Statement during his attendance of the Barunga Sport and Cultural Festival in the

4 Parliament of Australia, Senate Hansard, Thursday, 20 February 1975, Page: 369
5 The term Makarrata has come to have a number of meanings. The National Aboriginal Conference saw a Makarrata as a Treaty between the Aboriginal Nation(s) and the Australian Government. The Australian National Dictionary describes a Makarrata as “An Aboriginal ceremonial ritual symbolizing the restoration of peace after a dispute; an agreement.” For a discussion of the Makarrata concept, see The Final Report of the Australian Parliament’s Joint Select Committee on Constitutional Recognition relating to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peoples.
Northern Territory. Prime Minister Hawke’s speech at the Festival accepted the Burungu Statement’s request for a treaty-making process.

The Burungu Statement is one example of numerous actions Aboriginal communities have taken over many years in an effort to secure their rights within the Australian constitutional and legal system. Another is 1963’s Yirrkala Bark Petition.

During its tenure from 1990–2005, the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Commission (ATSIC), contributed actively to discussion of a Treaty, canvassing the benefits, potential difficulties and possible form and content. AIATSIS and its predecessor, the Australian Institute of Aboriginal Studies (AIAS), also worked to promote discussion of Treaty issues, including through the AIATSIS two-part seminar series on the Limits and Possibilities of a Treaty Process in Australia.

The level of government and Indigenous people(s) involved will determine the shape, subject matter and negotiating process for any particular Treaty. In this regard, the 2017 Uluru Statement from the Heart leaves all options open, calling for a Makarrata Commission to 'supervise a process of agreement-making between governments and First Nations and truth-telling about our history'.

Most Australian State and Territory governments have moved to address the issue of Treaty making with Indigenous people(s), although progress varies widely. Some experts consider that Western Australia’s South West Native Title Settlement with the Noongar peoples constitutes Australia's first Treaty with its Indigenous people.6

The Parliament of Victoria research paper Treaty discussions in Australia: an overview outlines recent Treaty discussions and action at Federal, State and Territory level. Background on Treaty issues and a timeline of developments to 2016 is set out in NITV’s Explainer: What is a treaty? The November 2018 Final Report of the Australian Parliament’s Joint Select Committee on Constitutional Recognition relating to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peoples includes a summary of the state of play regarding agreement making with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples and a discussion of the Makarrata concept.
