AIATSIS National Research Priority progress 2006–07

Overview	The National Research Priorities (NRP) set the agenda for government-funded research. These priorities aim to align research efforts and build critical mass in key areas as well as promote collaboration between research organisations and with industry. The four priorities are: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • An Environmentally Sustainable Australia • Promoting and Maintaining Good Health • Frontier Technologies for Building and Transforming Australian Industries • Safeguarding Australia. AIATSIS continues to contribute a substantial amount of its research effort to the first two of these priorities. The strategic focusing of the Institute's Research Program around the two themes of Indigenous country and governance and Indigenous social and cultural wellbeing underscore this direct contribution. AIATSIS also undertakes research in relevant goal areas in the third and, to a lesser degree, the fourth priority; particularly in relation to smart information use and promoting an innovation culture and economy.
An Environmentally Sustainable Australia <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Water — a critical resource • Transforming existing industries • Overcoming soil loss, salinity and acidity • Reducing and capturing emissions in transport and energy generation • Sustainable use of Australia's biodiversity • Developing deep earth resources • Responding to climate change and variability 	The purpose of this NRP is to transform the way we use our land, water, mineral and energy resources through a better understanding of human and environmental systems, including a better understanding of Indigenous settler relationships and the interplay between natural systems and human activity. Indigenous values in water and water management have remained a strong element of research in the Kimberley Regional Sustainability Project. The project is creating synergies between the development of regional economies, the protection of biodiversity and ecosystems, and the engagement of cultural knowledge and practices in the management of land and sea country. AIATSIS has increased its interest in the Murray–Darling Basin, with the appointment of Ms Jessica Weir, who is currently working on water management and planning with Land and Water Australia and the Murray and Lower Darling Rivers Indigenous Nations.

A central theme of this year's Native Title Conference was the management of land and sea country. Presentations at the conference investigated the interplay between native title and climate change (including participation in carbon abatement programs), water management, bio-prospecting and use of government programs to improve Indigenous involvement in land management.

The Success in Indigenous Community Organisations project included several case studies examining Indigenous involvement in the management of the environment, including parks and protected areas. It resulted in practical tools to support successful management practices. The AIATSIS Research Grants Program provides significant support for new research into Indigenous knowledge and management of the environment.

AIATSIS researchers provided support to the Marine and Tropical Science Research Facility (Queensland), the Torres Strait Regional Authority Land and Sea Management Unit, the Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Research Organisation sustainability group, the Wet Tropics Alliance and the Kimberley Economic Roundtable. AIATSIS is also a partner in the ARC Network, Discovering the past to shape the future: Networking environmental science for understanding Australia's biodiversity.

Key research projects on cultural landscapes, including the Dampier Archipelago, the Canning Stock Route and Wadeye, reveal the depth of cultural knowledge associated with place that has informed heritage and land management in these areas. The Dampier Archipelago has been included on the National Heritage List.

The Institute's native title research activities continue to forge partnerships with the mining industry, including sponsorship of a large research project, supported by the Minerals Council of Australia, to develop the capacity and resources of prescribed bodies corporate. AIATSIS is also a partner with the University of Melbourne, Rio Tinto and FaCSIA in an Australian Research Council project investigating the implementation of agreements between industry and Indigenous people.

	The Institute's native title, country management and governance research provides foundations for communities involved in land management and those that hold Indigenous tenures to effectively govern their traditional country.
Promoting and Maintaining Good Health <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • A healthy start to life • Ageing well, ageing productively • Preventive healthcare • Strengthening Australia's social and economic fabric 	The Australian Government is committed to fostering research that helps individuals and families to lead healthy, productive and fulfilling lives, which will yield economic and social benefits and add materially to national wellbeing. It is well understood that nowhere in Australia is this link more vital than in relation to Indigenous peoples. Life expectancy, the health and wellbeing of Indigenous infants, susceptibility to chronic disease and mental health are key challenges. All of the areas of focus identified by the NRP apply equally to Indigenous health. AIATSIS conducts one of the leading Indigenous social health and wellbeing research programs in the country. Two research fellows are fully engaged on projects particularly relating to understanding and preventing poor health, including with the Cooperative Research Centre for Aboriginal Health. This year AIATSIS continued to research early childhood transitions into schooling; language acquisition by Indigenous children; Indigenous ageing and dementia; preventive health care for prisoners; prevention of family violence; and community partnerships looking at regional approaches to emotional wellbeing and resilience among Indigenous people. AIATSIS has taken the lead among universities and government departments in using statistics for measurement and policy development in Indigenous health. In June 2007 the Institute hosted a workshop involving government and community organisations, as part of a project to improve understanding by Indigenous workers of the use of statistics, particularly in health fields. The AIATSIS Research Grants Program provides significant support for new research into health issues affecting Indigenous people.

Frontier Technologies

- Breakthrough science
- Frontier technologies
- Advanced materials
- Smart information use
- Promoting an innovation culture and economy

This NRP is intended to stimulate enhanced capacity in new technologies, improved data management and creative applications of digital technologies.

AIATSIS is a national leader in the digital management of important Indigenous archival materials, through its digitisation program and through partnerships with international research institutes such as the Max Planck Institute and the international DoBeS project. A consultancy was awarded to AIATSIS by the Department of Communications, Information Technology and the Arts (DCITA) to pilot an online language community access project. In partnership with communities in the Cape York Peninsula and the Katherine area, the project will demonstrate remote access to language materials held in our Canberra databases.

To improve access to its collections, AIATSIS completed a major review and restructure of the subject thesaurus available via the Mura® catalogue. The revised thesaurus will be available in early 2007–08. The Research Seminar Series held in the first semester of 2007 was co-ordinated via video link from Canberra, Darwin and Broome to foster information exchange between researchers and communities in remote and regional areas.

AIATSIS has provided a grant to the Murray and Lower Darling Rivers Indigenous Nations for a pilot project towards an online guide to overseas Indigenous collections. Results from this project should be available during 2008.

AIATSIS continues to lead the way in negotiating difficult rights issues, including moral, cultural and intellectual property rights, that arise with new and emerging technologies. Specific outcomes include the final products of the AIATSIS–Intellectual Property Research Institute of Australia intellectual and cultural property project, and the community access and return of materials projects with Cherbourg, Brewarrina and Palm Island. The Institute is also involved in ongoing work in the native title sector on the use, ownership and management of materials collected for native title claims.

Safeguarding Australia

- Critical infrastructure
- Understanding our region and the world
- Protecting Australia from invasive diseases and pests
- Protecting Australia from terrorism and crime
- Transformational defence technologies

This NRP includes safeguarding Australia from crime by greater understanding of societies and cultures, and protection from invasive diseases and pests.

AIATSIS research includes the final report of the National Drug Law Enforcement Research Fund, and work on family violence and social health infrastructure for prisons. In addition, the Institute's research on cultural economies and remote area sustainable land management touches on issues related to pest and disease management.
